INDEX OF U.S. RESIDENTS' FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE INFORMATIONMemorandum by the Director of Central Intelligence

1. During the war the Armed Forces and various agencies of the government obtained valuable information about the enemy from persons, files and business records in the United States. Due to the fact that the sources and nature of this information had not been previously cataloged, the search for it was without direction and coordination and resulted in concomitant duplication and waste of time and manpower.

2. A representative of the Department of State has suggested informally to the Central Intelligence Group that a central index of the foreign intelligence information available in the United States from other than government sources, be established. This matter falls under the provisions of paragraph 4b, N.I.A. Directive No. 2.

3. An informal survey by the Information Branch, Central Planning Staff of the views of the government agencies concerned confirms the desirability of coordinating the collection of this type of information and establishing a system for cataloging the results.

4. The Central Planning Staff will conduct a survey of this problem to include consideration of the following:

a. Types of foreign intelligence information now regularly collected by Federal agencies from individuals, colleges, foundations, libraries, business concerns, etc. in the United States.

c. Adequacy of coverage of foreign intelligence information available in the United States through these non-governmental sources and means for improving coverage.

d. Extent of duplication between government agencies in contacting individuals and others in the United States for foreign intelligence information and means for eliminating such duplication.

e. Availability of each agency's foreign intelligence information collected from sources within the United States to other agencies concerned and means for improving inter-agency distribution.

f. Practicability of establishing standard procedures for the collection of foreign intelligence information from non-governmental sources in the United States and from individuals entering or returning to the country.

g. Means for insuring a continuous flow of foreign informational material possessed by individuals entering or returning to the country.

h. Practicability of establishing, either centrally or in the respective government agencies, a control index showing what information (from non-government sources in the United States) is available in each agency and the type and extent of potential foreign intelligence information possessed by individuals, institutions and business houses in the United States.

5. The Central Planning Staff, C.I.G., in conducting the survey, will be authorized to call for personnel indicated in paragraph 6, below, to appear and give such oral or written reports as may be required for purposes of this survey.

1. In a letter from Dr. K. K. Addicott of the Department of State, dated 3 April 1946, to the Acting Chief, Central Reports Staff, he proposed the setting up of a central index covering all foreign experience information possessed by people in the United States. This letter was referred on 11 April to the Central Planning Staff.

2. During the war, extremely valuable information was obtained by the armed forces from individuals, colleges, foundations and business concerns in the United States. Had the extent and value of this information been known at the outset of the war the information which eventually was obtained, could have been earmarked earlier and, in consequence, information which was in many cases obtained too late to be of any value, would have been available when needed.

3. Central Planning Staff has conducted an informal survey of this problem and has found that many of the Government's agencies collect information of this nature in the regular course of their business. However, no uniform pattern of collection, recording and indexing is followed, thus minimizing its value for coordinated intelligence purposes.

4. In the course of this informal survey, it was learned that a committee consisting of War, Navy and State Departments, FBI, and Immigration Department currently is working on the problem of centralizing the immigration records which now are decentralized at the various ports of entry. Immigration records constitute one potential source of foreign intelligence information and should be closely related to the whole problem of collection of foreign intelligence from sources in the United States.

5. Attached is a draft C.I.G. Directive for your consideration, initiating a study to determine the best ways and means of collecting, recording and indexing the vast fund of information now available in the country or which may subsequently become available.
